Personal Bio

Mariam Elias is a Nigerian-American actress, model, and artist. Mariam began showing her love for the arts at a young age by performing in front of crowds with short comedy acts, monologue performances, choreographing, dancing, and watching and recreating film performances she had seen. By watching those films, she began to teach herself languages such as: French, Spanish, and Italian, as well as her native Nigerian languages Igbo, Yoruba, and Hausa. Mariam began acting with roles in film, television, and theatre throughout the Midwest and has been featured in covers and editorials for The Forerunner, Bloom, Velvet Fields, and Binge Magazine to name a few. If she's not portraying characters on the screen or on the stage, she does so by creating digital and canvas art and working as a graphic designer at youth-led indie magazine Potential Magazine. A self-proclaimed film lover and critic, Mariam enjoys using her digital design skills and love for movies to showcase her art and favorite films on her YouTube and other social channels, as well as help other young creatives learn how to get started in digital design and the arts.
